

Call for Papers: Special Issue on *Bombed Cities: Legacies of Post-War Planning on the Contemporary Urban and Social Fabric

Dear all,

In conjunction with the international, peer-reviewed, open access journal Urban Planning we are excited to launch a call for papers for a special thematic issue:

Bombed Cities: Legacies of Post-War Planning on the Contemporary Urban and Social Fabric.

Post-Second World War reconstruction is now an important field of research around the world, with strands of enquiry investigating architecture, urban archaeology, heritage studies, urban design, city planning, critical cartography, and social geography. This thematic issue seeks to provide a critical statement on mid-twentieth century urban planning, starting from the period of the Second World War. We are looking for contributions that examine post-war reconstruction visions and strategies and how the early planning visions and decisions have been imprinted on today's urban and social fabric of various bombed cities. The emphasis of the thematic issue is on empirically driven studies of post-catastrophic damage and reconstruction, actualised through qualitative, quantitative, or mixed methodologies. The call can be viewed in full here:
